

THE LAST SIGNAL

Written by Test Author

INT. ABANDONED RADIO STATION - NIGHT

Rain hammers the windows. Dusty equipment fills the room. A single bare bulb flickers overhead. MAYA (30s, determined, muddy jacket) pushes through the door, breathing hard.

MAYA

Come on, come on. Someone has to be listening.

She crosses to an old transmitter, wipes dust from the dials with her sleeve. Her hands are shaking. She finds a frequency and flicks the switch.

MAYA (CONT'D)

(into microphone)

This is Maya Chen at station KRX-7. If anyone can hear this, we need help. The bridge is out. We have twelve survivors and two days of supplies. Please respond.

Static. She slumps back. Then – a crackle.

INT. EMERGENCY OPERATIONS CENTRE - CONTINUOUS

Banks of monitors. Tired operators in headsets. DIRECTOR COLE (50s, grey at the temples) stands over a technician when a signal light blinks red.

TECHNICIAN

Sir. We're getting something on the old KRX frequency.

DIRECTOR COLE

Put it through.

Maya's voice fills the room, fragile and clear. Cole closes his eyes for a moment.

DIRECTOR COLE (CONT'D)

(quietly)

Twelve survivors. Get me a helicopter and someone who knows the valley road. We move in twenty minutes.

The room erupts into motion.

INT. ABANDONED RADIO STATION - MOMENTS LATER

Maya stares at the transmitter. The static shifts. A voice breaks through.

COLE (V.O.)

KRX-7, this is Director Cole at Emergency Operations. We have your position. Help is on the way. Can you confirm the condition of your survivors?

Maya exhales – a long, shuddering breath. She presses the transmit button.

MAYA

(voice breaking)

We have three with injuries. One serious. The others are cold but they're holding on. We're all holding on.

She releases the button. Through the rain-streaked window, far in the distance, the first faint pulse of a helicopter searchlight.

FADE OUT.

END OF EXCERPT